

Contributors

Jacqueline Akhurst is a professor in psychology at Rhodes University, South Africa. As a Counselling Psychologist with a PhD in psychotherapy, her research focusses on community-based interventions, often utilising Action Research or Activity Theory. Contact details: J.Akhurst@ru.ac.za

Nyna Amin, a former recipient of a Fulbright scholarship and university distinguished teacher, is an Associate Professor of curriculum studies in the School of Education at UKZN. She writes in the fields of curriculum, teacher education, higher education, medical education and gender. She is one of the co-editors (with Michael Samuel and Rubby Dhunpath) of the book, Disrupting higher education curriculum: Undoing cognitive damage, (2016) from Sense Publishers. Contact details: amin@ukzn.ac.za

Benita Bobo is a PhD student in psychology at Rhodes University, South Africa. Her research focusses on higher education, development, and gender studies. Contact details: B.Bobo@ru.ac.za

Desire Chiwandire holds a Master's (with distinction) in Political and International Studies from Rhodes University. He recently completed his PhD thesis focusing on Ubuntu and the social inclusion of students with disabilities at South African universities. He is currently teaching undergraduate and a postgraduate courses in the Department of Political and International Studies, Rhodes University. His research interests broadly focus on Disability Politics specifically the intersectionality of disability and race in South African educational and workplace environments. He has published in peer reviewed journals and has also showcased his research in numerous international conferences both in South Africa and overseas. He is also a member of the Rhodes University Disability Committee. Contact details: chiwandiredesire@gmail.com

Contributors

Karen Suzette Collett is a senior lecturer in the Department of Educational Studies at the University of the Western Cape. She lectures in the field of school leadership and management and teacher development. For the last twenty nine years she has worked in the area of school development at a school and systems level in South Africa and in Namibia. Her current research interests focus on the promotion of well-being in schools including novice teacher well-being and the development of schools as thinking and learning organisations. She has published in the field of educational leadership and teaching and learning in higher education. Contact details: kcollett@uwc.ac.za

Rubby Dhunpath is the Director of Teaching and Learning at UKZN. His previous appointments include that of Teacher Educator at UKZN, Senior Research Specialist at the Human Sciences Research Council and Rockefeller research Fellow at the University of Illinois. A Fulbright and Spencer Alumni, he now provides leadership for the promotion of scholarship in teaching and learning and institutional research. He is currently an Advisor/Mentor in the Teaching Advancement at Universities (TAU) Fellowship. Rubby has researched and published in education & language policy, organizational ethnographies and higher education curriculum. Contact details: dhunpath@ukzn.ac.za

Mlamuli Nkosingphile Hlatshwayo (PhD) is a scholar in the field of Higher Education. He has an established research record in the transformation of the South African education. He is a lecturer in the discipline of Curriculum Studies at the School of Education, University of KwaZulu-Natal. He was a visiting scholar at the University of Connecticut's Neag School of Education for 2018-2019. He is the Convener of the Special Interest Group in Knowledge-Building in Educational practices, SAERA. Contact details: HlatshwayoM@ukzn.ac.za

Bothwell Manyonga completed BA (Sociology and Psychology) at Africa University (Zimbabwe), Master's (Development Studies) at University of KwaZulu Natal, and PhD (Development Studies) at the University of the Free State, South Africa. Bothwell's PhD research focused on broader debates on the purposes and practices of teaching and learning in higher education, particularly on how curriculum and pedagogy contributes to human development through expanding people's capabilities and agency. His research interests and upcoming publications continue to focus on the relationships between knowledge, work, society and capabilities formation, particularly for students living with disabilities in both contact and open and distance learning. Contact details: manyob@unisa.ac.za

Sindile Ngubane-Mokiwa is an Associate Professor and Head of Department at the Institute for Open Distance Learning, College of Graduate Studies at Unisa. Her research interests are Open Distance Learning, Disability, Information and Communication Technologies, Postgraduate supervision and marginalised populations. Prof Ngubane-Mokiwa has served as an Acting Deputy Director at the Advocacy and Resource Centre for Students with Disabilities (ARCSWiD) and a Visiting Scholar at the Faculty of Education at the Open University-UK and Cambridge University in the United Kingdom. Contact details: mokiwsa@unisa.ac.za

Bert Olivier's principal position is that of Extraordinary Professor of Philosophy at the University of the Free State, South Africa. He has published academic articles and books across a wide variety of disciplines, including philosophy, art theory, architecture, literature, psychoanalytic theory, cinema, communication studies and social theory. Bert received the Stals Prize for Philosophy in 2004, and a Distinguished Professorship from Nelson Mandela Metropolitan University in 2012. He is also an NRF B-rated researcher, and writes regularly on the Mail and Guardian's Thoughtleader-website. Contact details: OlivierG1@ufs.ac.za

Fayth Ruffin's career spans across law, business, government, the non-profit sector and academia. She intertwines research and community engagement to co-produce knowledge that advances curriculum transformation. Socio-legal research findings have been presented at OECD, UN and World Justice Forum events. Her multi-inter-transdisciplinary research interests revolve around global/local governance, IKS, community-based justice systems, meta-sector networks and entrepreneurship. The seasoned mentor is a sought-after public speaker, has published widely, graduated numerous postgraduate students and holds the 2018 UKZN Distinguished Teacher's Award and the 2019 CHE/HELTASA National Teaching Excellence Award. Contact details: ruffin@ukzn.ac.za

Contributors

Carolien van den Berg is a senior lecturer in Information Systems at the University of the Western Cape. She obtained her PhD in Information Systems. Her areas of research and expertise include digital innovation, digital female entrepreneurship, business development, digital strategy and innovative pedagogies. Prior to her current role, she served as a Senior Manager in a Management Consultancy that specialised in the implementation of large technology transformation projects in Africa and Europe. Her area of specialisation was designing and building a systemically integrated organisation, work and people data architecture. Contact details: cvandenberg@uwc.ac.za

Belinda Verster is a senior lecturer in urban and regional planning at the Cape Peninsula University of Technology. She is in her final year of Doctoral studies and holds a Master's degree in urban and regional planning. She has 24 years academic experience and has published in the fields of sustainable urban transportation, professional academic development and higher education. She is a registered professional urban planner with the South African Council of Planners and an executive member of the South African Planning Institute. Contact details: versterb@cput.ac.za